Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Romanticism and the Romantic School in Germany It may not be impossible that the mysterious forces which go into the making of man and woman are so adjusted that the woman has in her constitution more of that which, in this book, I have called Love, and man more of that which I have called Duty. So that, in the union of the two, the one would be a spiritual complement to the other, and the union itself a nearer approach to perfect humanity than could be found in either man or woman alone. If this be so, it would be the appointed mission of woman to cultivate love as her highest goal: for only through it could her human duty find truest womanly utterance. Love has ever been your mission and your goal. In memory of this love, and of its powers towards the accomplishment of human ideals, and of the strength it gave me for the fulfillment of this my task, I dedicate this book.
