Scott of Fauquier: On Certain Resolutions Touching the Action of Congress on the Subject of Slavery The resolutions reported by the joint committee on the Wilmot proviso and other kindred measures, being under consideration, Mr. Scott said: I think I have reason to complain of intolerance towards me on this floor. Scarcely had the gentleman from Spottsylvania, the mover of the resolutions, spoken ten minutes to his subject, when the gentleman from Stafford arrests his remarks, and deprecating discussion, in that solemn manner he so well knows how to assume, declares that he will feel surprise if the resolutions are assailed from any quarter; and this, too, after the determined opposition which in every stage of their progress I have evinced. I am not blind to the purpose of the movement. I know the force of the argument of numbers, potent with all, it is controlling with some, and I feel its effects in the diminished ranks of those with whom I stand on this occasion. On a former day I...
